MINING HISTORY ASSOCIATION

The Mining History Association invites you to join with us in the exchange of information about our mining past. The publications and conferences of the MHA address all aspects of metal and coal mining in North America, including the American West, the Alaskan frontier, and the Canadian and Mexican experiences, as well as their European antecedents and the spread of mining people and technology throughout the world.

The membership is comprised of individuals and organizations interested in mining history. Their backgrounds range from academia to mine operators, from museum staff and others concerned with the preservation of historic sites or artifacts, to individuals researching, writing or just interested in mining history.

Members receive the quarterly newsletter with timely information on Association activities including annual conference programs and notices of new mining history books. In addition, each member receives the annual journal containing significant, peer-reviewed articles on various aspects of mining history submitted by MHA members. Each year a summer conference is held, which in the past has been in towns such as Leadville, Cripple Creek and Ouray, Colorado; Lead, South Dakota; Nevada City, California; Rossland, British Columbia; and Farmington, Missouri.

The conferences provide a forum for members to speak on their interests in mining history, participate in field trips, and exchange information with other Association members.

Three awards are given by the Association to recognize persons who have contributed to the advancement of mining history. The Rodman Paul Award recognizes the individual or individuals who have made outstanding contributions to the field. The prestigious Clark Spence Award is presented biennially to the author of the most significant, recently-published book on mining history. The John Townley Award is given each year to the author of the article rated most highly in the Mining History Journal.

We look forward to having you join us in the fascinating field of mining history!
